Jersey City Municipal Website Receives National Web Award From Juggle.com

jerseycitynj.gov recognized as One of Seven Top NJ Government Websites

JERSEY CITY – jerseycitynj.gov is one of the seven Top City Government Website Award winners from New Jersey recognized by online encyclopedia Juggle.com.

According to their press release, Juggle.com’s awards editors evaluated city government websites on a wide range of criteria, including information accessibility, technological innovation, ease of use, and exceptional service to the public.

“Juggle.com’s Top Government Website awards honor state, county and city government websites and blogs. Award editors reviewed 3,000 government websites from all 50 states before naming 2010’s award winners,” said Juggle’s Government Awards Editor, Lauren Taggart.

Award recipients receive a feature page on Juggle.com that includes an interview with one of the government representatives responsible for maintaining or managing each website. For Jersey City’s feature, visit <http://www.juggle.com/jersey-city-new-jersey-top-city-government-website>.

“Congratulations to the team members who earned this award for the City,” said Mayor Jerramiah T. Healy. “This shows how a talented, dedicated group of public employees can produce a top quality website that provides a rich variety of timely and interesting information and features in a very cost effective manner. I couldn’t be more proud.”

Unlike other municipalities who spend millions of dollars on website design, Jersey City’s 2007 website redesign was done at a cost of only $37,500 following a competitive RFP process awarded to OHO Interactive.

Belleville, Illinois-based Juggle.com is an online encyclopedia and reference resource featuring facts, articles, images, biographies, and statistics covering thousands of popular topics. For more information on Juggle and other topics, visit www.juggle.com.
